SATURDAY EVENING, SEPTEMBER 3.

A TEXT FOR A TEMPERANCE LECTURE.—Mrs. Julia Shaugnessy, a widow 32 years old, suffering under the last stage of delirium tremens, and her four children aged 3, 6, 8, and 13, who were almost starved for the want of the necessities of life, were brought to Jefferson Market Police Court in New York, Wednesday morning. The Agent of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children learned of the drunken mother and her starving children, and called at their residence. On entering the one room, situated on the top floor of an old three-story frame building, they found Mrs. Shaugnessy, the mother, sitting on the bed in a dazed condition. Two of the children were almost naked, only a calico slip covering their emaciated forms. The room was almost barren of furniture, and that of the poorest kind. It consisted of a broken bed, three bottomless chairs, and a three-legged table. While Mr. Stocking was examining the room, the third child entered the room, having a flask of whiskey clutched in both of her hands, barely able to walk from weakness. Not a crust of bread or anything edible was found in the room. The children's eyes were red from crying for bread, while the besotted mother had sent for ten cents worth of whiskey. These three children were in a most filthy condition. Had it not been for the kind neighbors they would certainly have starved. For the past month the oldest child has been earning $4 a week in a preserve factory. Little other wages went for food, as the mother, who was crazed with drink, would spend the most of it on whiskey. John Shaugnessy, the husband and father, who died some five weeks ago, was a hard working man. He was a longshoreman. His death afflicted the wife and led her to drink, since which time the neighbors state that she has not drawn a sober breath and has neglected her children. The drunken mother was committed to the Island for three months, and the children placed in an asylum.

Above all other earthly ills,
I hate the low degenerate fashion
By slow degrees they downward tend,
And then pause on upward tend.
What good does comfort ever bring,
Their good effects amount to naught.
Now, Dr. Pierce prepares a pill
That is exactly like the bill—
A Pill, rather, that is all—
A Pleasant Purgative, and small;
Just try them as you feel their need,
You'll find that I speak truth, indeed.
